An Iraqi Feast

In Heather Raffo’s Noura, which played on the proscenium in January and February, a family of Iraqi immigrants prepares to host a holiday meal with friends. Noura spends hours making dolma, chicken biryani and kubba mosul with samoon bread on the side — traditional Iraqi dishes that make cameos onstage during the electrifying dinner scene.

To help the cast and creative team experience Iraqi food and culture firsthand, cultural consultant Shaymaa Hasan came to rehearsal one afternoon bearing the ultimate gift of hospitality: a homemade feast inspired by the play and her beloved country. Then, just like in Noura, the company gathered around the table in a beautiful moment of camaraderie.
From Artistic Director
Joseph Haj

Dear Friends,

The Western canon is in the Guthrie’s DNA. It was the bedrock of Tyrone Guthrie’s vision and remains one of our greatest commitments today, which is why roughly half the plays in any given season are classics. While planning for 2019–2020, we began considering Greek plays, searching for a title with resonance and relevance to our present societal moment.

So it’s no surprise that SITI Company’s mesmerizing production of The Bacchae caught our attention. Their interpretation of this ancient tale is funny, irreverent and smart. It feels on the fringes and dead center at the same time, staying faithful to Euripides’ text while being undeniably current. I’m also thrilled to introduce Guthrie audiences to a globally renowned ensemble who trains and performs together in a powerfully shared aesthetic.

Presenting a SITI Company production at the Guthrie is a full-circle moment for me. As a young actor, I was part of their inaugural season and had the incredible opportunity to work with co-founders Anne Bogart and Tadashi Suzuki. The impact SITI Company has made on the theater landscape is profound. Their approach to ensemble-based work and actor training has become a methodology employed and revered by an entire generation of artists.

To have Anne Bogart at the helm of The Bacchae is a gift. She is the American theater’s great philosopher and thinker, and I’m lucky to call her a longtime friend and colleague. The lessons I learned from acting with SITI Company have stayed with me — and I know this vibrant piece of theater will stay with you.

Thanks for joining us, and enjoy the show!

Guthrie Spotlight

Greeks at the Guthrie

“Euripidean drama is a thing both cool and fiery, equally capable of freezing and burning.” This quote by Friedrich Nietzsche, featured in the program from our 1987 production of The Bacchae, conveys the intense spectrum of emotions ever-present in Greek tragedy. Throughout the Guthrie’s nearly 60-year history, we’ve produced plays by all three great tragedians — Aeschylus, Euripides and Sophocles — and continually invited audiences to engage with these provocative Greek classics.

Lena Sands
Costume Designer

Lena Sands is a costume designer, puppet artist and scenographer for live performance, installation and film. Her work supports the unsettling of dramatic space and the wringing out of shared cultural routines. She collaborates with communities and other artists to investigate peoplehood, connection and our bodies. Sands’ designs have been seen at many venues, including BAM, REDCAT, Getty Villa, Skirball Cultural Center, Kirk Douglas Theatre, Alliance Française Nairobi and Edinburgh Festival Fringe as well as in warehouses, public parks and a horseback-riding ring. Her work in film and television has been seen on Amazon Prime, LVMH’s online magazine Nowness (www.nowness.com), Lifetime, “Live with Regis and Kelly,” REDCAT, Nantucket Film Festival and Los Angeles Women’s International Film Festival. Sands’ work was recently on display at the State Historical Museum in Moscow as part of the exhibition "Innovative Costume of the 21st Century: The Next Generation." She holds an M.F.A. in Design for Performance from California Institute of the Arts.

Darron L West
Sound Designer

Darron L West has been a SITI Company member since 1993. He is a Tony- and Obie-winning sound designer whose 30-year career spans theater and dance both on and off Broadway. His work has been heard in more than 600 productions across the U.S. and internationally in 14 countries. Additional honors include Drama Desk, Lucille Lortel, AUDELCO and Princess Grace Statue Awards, among others. Most recently at the Guthrie, he designed sound for the 2019 production of The Glass Menagerie.

Erik Sanko
Composer

Erik Sanko is best known as a fixture of New York City’s downtown music scene, having worked with such luminaries as John Cale, Yoko Ono, Jim Carroll and James Chance and the Contortions. He was also a 16-year veteran and bassist with The Lounge Lizards. As a bass player, Sanko has played on more than 40 albums for musical groups ranging from They Might Be Giants to Run DMC. He was the leader of the art/noise band Skeleton Key for 20 years and is currently composing a suite of music for shortwave radio and solo cello for cellist Jeffrey Zeigler.

Train With SITI Company This Summer

June 7 – July 4, 2020
SITI Company Summer Theater Institute at Skidmore College
Saratoga Springs, New York

Sixty artists are invited to take part in a four-week intensive workshop that includes rigorous physical movement, theoretical research and the generation and performance of new work. The program's objective is to develop courageous theater artists who are able to integrate new influences from many disciplines into their work. Pre-professional and professional artists are encouraged to apply.

The 2020 summer intensive will concentrate on collaboration, focusing on different approaches to creating work and how our training forms the foundation for collaborative efforts with others. Special guest artists Charles L. Mee, Monica Bill Barnes and Rubén Polendo of Theater Mitu will be in residence alongside SITI Company members.

Applications are being accepted now through March 23. Learn more at www.skidmore.edu/summertheater.

SITI Company

SITI Company was built on the bedrock of ensemble. They believe that through the practice of collaboration, a group of artists working together over time can have a significant impact on both contemporary theater and the world at large.

Founded in 1992 by Anne Bogart, Tadashi Suzuki and a group of like-minded artists, SITI Company began as an agreement to redefine and revitalize contemporary theater in the U.S. through an emphasis on international cultural exchange, training and collaboration. Through performances, educational programs and collaborations with other artists and thinkers, SITI Company challenges the status quo, trains to achieve artistic excellence in every aspect of their work and offers new ways of seeing and of being, both as artists and global citizens. SITI Company provides a gymnasium for the soul where the interaction of art, artists, audiences and ideas inspire the possibility for change, optimism and hope.

SITI Company Anne Bogart

@siticompany
JOHANNA BUCH: You’ve been involved with SITI Company from the beginning. How have you seen the company evolve over the past three decades?

ANNE BOGART: We have developed the ability to rehearse a play as a collective, much in the way a Ouija board functions, where you put your hands collectively on a planchette, ask a question and wait for the planchette to start moving, slowly spelling out the answer to your question. In the case of our rehearsals, the planchette is the play itself. The embodiment of the play — the staging, physical actions and musicality — emerges from listening intently and following where “it” wants to go and what “it” wants to do. We start by trying, as best as we can, to ask a clear, germane question. Then, together, we stay present and listen closely until movement and momentum transpire. When a rehearsal is going well, the motion and decisions seem to happen by themselves without the encumberment of our own preconceptions, plans or desires. This approach requires that each person is thoroughly prepared and arrives with their own ideas but also, perhaps paradoxically, shares an openness to influence, trusts the process and cooperates with what emerges. Through listening together, we eventually discover what the play wants to be.
JB: In your experience, how does creating work as an ensemble enhance the storytelling?

AB: An endemic problem has surfaced in the theater world largely due to the technical nature of filmmaking and television, where editing has taken the power of storytelling away from individual actors. What has seeped insidiously into theater is the notion that an actor is only responsible for the little bits of their part in the whole storyline. This tendency has generally robbed theater audiences of the experience of a collective of individuals, each of whom is responsible for the whole event. How thrilling to be in the presence of a group of actors, an ensemble, each taking on the responsibility for the entire arc of the play. Each actor, no matter how small their role, could potentially stand alone on the stage and deliver the full journey of the storyline. “Each action, each gesture,” as [director] Konstantin Stanislavski was known to say, “contains the entire arc of the play.”

JB: Tell us about your time researching The Bacchae at Columbia University. How did your studies fuse into the production?

AB: I usually spend two years researching and preparing before the first rehearsal of a classic play or opera. This is a period that I cherish. Not only does the dramaturgical study and production history inspire an understanding of the play and its context, but the in-depth investigation tends to free my imagination, allowing for conceptual leaps of faith and associative thinking. But despite my extensive research preceding The Bacchae rehearsals at the Getty Villa in Los Angeles, the biggest influence on our production was the play itself. I arrived with too many ideas; it was a painful process to let go of my precious conceptual opinions and allow the company to discover the right form. Euripides fights back against the imposition of too many notions about interpretation and staging. If you listen carefully and engage in the archeological excavation of an ancient play as great as The Bacchae, it won’t allow you to mitigate its power. It will talk to you from the past. It will make its influence impossible to ignore.

JB: How does The Bacchae hold up a mirror to our current society?

AB: Perhaps The Bacchae endures because its message continues to be vital to each of us. A classic play can only be seen through the lens of the moment it is performed, and a great classic play always seems to be speaking about the present moment. This consistent relevance is probably what contributes to our designation of the word “great.” In The Bacchae, a group of exotic foreigners arrive from the East with a crucial message for the West. Led by the shape-shifting Dionysus, the message counsels: Do not ban the unfamiliar, the foreign or the chaotic from your private life, your social life or the political sphere. Does this sound familiar to our contemporary cultural and political moment? Do issues of hubris, immigration, putting up walls and banning the unfamiliar feel current?

JB: Yes, on so many levels. Joseph Haj refers to you as American theater’s great philosopher. What has been occupying your mind lately?

AB: Joe Haj is far too kind. The dominant question for me revolves around the role of an audience in the theater. What is supposed to happen in the space that actors and audiences share? What are the politics and ethics of that space? What is actually happening — physiologically, neurologically and empathically — to the actors and the audience? What part of the human experience does the production speak to? What is required of each individual in the audience? What constitutes a civic space or arena? What does it mean to be part of an audience, and what are the responsibilities of its individual members? What responsibilities do the actors have to the audience? What layers of meaning are exchanged below the plot and storyline? What is the audience doing?

JB: You’ve said that art is not simply something to look at or listen to but a dare to the audience to make sense of it. How will The Bacchae challenge us?

AB: I hope our production offers just enough stimuli to ignite rich imaginative and associative journeys. And I hope each audience member makes their own journey, enjoying radically different associations and memories. I hope the audience is emboldened by the way the actors share and relish being onstage together. I hope The Bacchae resonates in hearts, minds and bodies. I hope the experience leads to many conversations among friends and families.

The Dangerous Liberation of Theater

By Helene Foley
Production Dramaturg

Euripides apparently wrote The Bacchae while in Macedonia, shortly before his death in 406 B.C.E. and in the wake of a difficult period for Athenian democracy. The Peloponnesian War with Sparta and its allies was still going on. An oligarchic revolt in 411 had led to a bloodbath in Athens, and the democracy was only just reestablishing itself. In Macedonia, Euripides was observing firsthand an autocratic regime.

Shortly after Euripides’ death, the comic poet Aristophanes’ Frogs has the god of wine and theater Dionysus descend to Hades with the intention of bringing Euripides back to keep the city safe for producing its choruses — that is, theater and all public choral performances by democratic citizens in Athens. Like Aristophanes, Euripides likely worried about both the stability of the democracy and the future of the public performing arts. Festivals of Dionysus were central to Attic democracy; they were expensive for the city and the producers but inclusive of the male citizen population. They allowed people release from the restrictions of ordinary life. In Frogs, Euripides defines himself as a democratic poet who gives a voice to everyone, including those who had virtually no public voice in the city. In my view, he ended a life spent writing and performing plays for Dionysus with The Bacchae in part to reconsider the future of both theater and democracy, and he is afraid of what repressing Dionysus’ special form of speech might mean.

The Bacchae was performed in the Athenian theater of Dionysus in front of the god’s two temples and before his statue, held by his priest in the front row. The play addresses the introduction of the worship of the god into Thebes, his birthplace, which is resisted by his first cousin, the very young king Pentheus: He is just growing a beard, clearly has little experience with women and is not confident in his authority. Dionysus has maddened all the women of the city, who are now worshiping the god in the mountains, leaving behind their children, families and domestic duties. The god has also brought a chorus of Asian women with him to demonstrate his worship to Thebes, and this chorus risks imprisonment to perform its case.

If accepted, Dionysus brings wine, symposia, music, dance, special costumes — a valuable collective release for the whole city and, by implication, theater itself. While under the god’s influence, people can shed their normal identities. Collectively, women feel empowered and liberated to imitate male activities like hunting; men can express an attraction to sides of themselves they normally repress. Old men no longer feel their age. Asian women begin to seem less foreign; the choral odes in The Bacchae have democratic undertones. Social identity feels culturally imposed rather than natural.

Thebes is a young city. Pentheus’ grandfather Cadmus founded it and established order with the help of the armed Sown Men sprung from a dragon’s teeth; one of them is Pentheus’ now-deceased father, Echion. The city has not yet incorporated everything festal and liberating that Dionysus represents. Pentheus can only imagine keeping order by using military force and imposing binary oppositions — male versus female, Greek versus barbarian — on his city. He rejects the advice of his grandfather Cadmus, the priest Tiresias, the servant who arrests Dionysus, disguised as a mortal priest of his Bacchic cult, and a messenger who has seen the maddened women tear apart cattle and defeat armed men on the mountain to accept the worship of Dionysus. Pentheus does listen, but he cannot hear.

His attempt at repression fails. Dionysus releases the women and escapes imprisonment. He tortures Pentheus offstage with phantoms and shakes his palace with an earthquake. Pentheus is shocked to find the disguised god outside and immediately plans to deploy military force against the women on the mountain. Yet he is vulnerable to the speech he allows the disguised Dionysus because the god can use language to disrupt his narrow cultural vision and introduce ambiguity and alluring impulses into his mind. Pentheus initially imagines that the women are having illicit intercourse with men on the mountain. Although he hears that they are not, when the stranger tempts him with seeing what the women are doing, he resists with difficulty. As he descends under the god’s influence into an altered state, he agrees to go spy on them rather than attacking them. Dionysus dresses him as a woman. Pentheus begins to perform the role of a worshipper, to dance, to imagine the thrill of being carried back to the city in his mother’s arms. The women on the mountain tear him apart. As he dies, Pentheus recognizes his errors, but too late.

His crazed mother Agave carries his head back to the city. Cadmus, his wife Harmonia, Agave and her sisters are banished from Thebes even though Cadmus accepted the god’s cult. Dionysus’ worship is established in Thebes and, since the ending of the play is damaged, we do not hear what regime replaces the descendants of Cadmus in Thebes.

The god and his chorus depart for other Greek cities, Athens presumably included.

In this play, Dionysus says that he is the kindest and most terrible of gods. If accepted, he offers a festal liberation from the stresses of ordinary life and maintaining traditional social identities for everyone in a city. For the moment, he creates communal unity. If repressed, resistance is likely to fail, and an explosion of undifferentiated and amoral violence can occur. The speech with which The Bacchae is concerned, as the chorus keeps showing Thebes in its song and dance, is performed speech. We can only understand what Dionysus is about by performing selves that are different from our daily selves. We perform this speech in a group with our bodies as well as our voices. It is not strictly rational. We temporarily enter another world as spectators or participants. Theater and the performing arts, like Dionysus, aim to communicate this potentially dangerous liberation in a form that invites us, unlike Pentheus, to hear what it has to say.

BACKSTORY

SYNOPSIS
When the god Dionysus learns that Pentheus, the young king of Thebes, has banned the people from worshiping him, he disguises himself and arrives in the city with plans to settle the score. Dionysus drives the women of Thebes, including Pentheus’ mother, Agave, into an ecstatic frenzy of dancing and hunting on Mount Cithaeron. The king orders his soldiers to arrest anyone found engaging in the rites.

Dionysus, still in disguise, allows himself to be arrested and sets a trap for Pentheus. The god breaks free of his chains and razes the palace with a giant earthquake. A messenger brings sensational reports from Mount Cithaeron, including news that the women are behaving strangely and performing incredible miracles. Dionysus persuades the king to disguise himself as a woman and witness what is taking place on the mountain. A second messenger arrives in a state of shock, reporting that the women captured Pentheus and tore his body apart.

Agave returns to Thebes, carrying what she believes to be the head of a mountain lion she killed with her bare hands. As her Dionysian ecstasy wears off, Agave realizes she is carrying her son’s severed head. Dionysus appears in his true form and delivers devastating consequences to Pentheus’ family.

FROM DIRECTOR ANNE BOGART
More than any other play in Western civilization, Euripides’ The Bacchae is probably the one that most directly addresses the art of theater. Dionysus is not only the god of divine ecstasy, fertility, wine and harvest, but also the theater. At one point, a bewitched Pentheus exclaims, “I seem to see two suns, the city of Thebes doubled.” Indeed, we attend the theater knowing that we are “seeing double.” We are aware, for example, that we are looking at an actor or precisely lit staging and scenery, but at the same time, we allow ourselves to enter another world that is merely suggested by what is actually present.

In our production, the role of Dionysus is personified by a woman rather than a man. The chorus of Bacchant women is embodied by both men and women. Toward the end of The Bacchae, our Agave speaks in Japanese, transcending language — the eloquence of her emotional intensity communicates the unfathomable depths of her grief.

These theatrical choices are based on SITI Company’s ongoing investment in international exchange, including a longtime relationship with the Suzuki Company of Toga in Japan as well as the creation of theater that unites historical perspectives with present-moment sensibilities.

FROM TRANSLATOR AARON POOCHIGIAN
My translation of The Bacchae is exceptional in that it is intended for live performance. This emphasis means that the translation is comprehensible on a first hearing and that it preserves, formally, the incantatory quality of the poetry in the original. I translated the dialogue and narrative sections into the iambic pentameter of Shakespeare and set the choral sections apart with different rhythms and rhyme to make clear these sections are songs and not conversational speech. The resulting translation is a musical experience that modulates, as the original does, between spoken and sung lines of verse. Euripides was, famously, a poetic virtuoso, and I have done all I can to recreate the sonic richness of his original version in English.

From the Board Chair

The arrival of spring always feels like a gift after the long months of winter. Days stretch out and we can’t wait to enjoy milder temperatures and signs of regeneration. As we move from winter to spring in Minnesota, the stark contrast often prompts a greater appreciation for the uniqueness of each season.

Theater moves in a similar way. There are tragedies like SITI Company’s The Bacchae that boldly take on complex themes, and there are joyous comedies like Kate Hamill’s fresh take on Emma. They impact us differently, yet they explore various aspects of our common humanity.

Thanks to the steadfast generosity of our donors, the Guthrie is able to share a wide variety of world-class theater and community programs season after season. Simply put, we cannot do it without you. On behalf of the board of directors, thank you for helping us further our vision to transform lives through the experience of theater.

With gratitude,

We are thrilled the Guthrie has brought to Minnesota this new adaptation of Euripides’ The Bacchae, directed by Anne Bogart and performed by SITI Company. Known for her generous curiosity and extraordinary invention, Bogart’s pioneering collaborations for the contemporary stage have won international admiration. We are incredibly proud of Joseph Haj and his team for making this engagement possible, and we look forward to hearing the responses from Guthrie audiences.

Corporate, Foundation and Public Support

Vital support from our corporate, foundation and government partners allows community members of all ages and abilities to access internationally renowned theater and celebrated artists. Grants from state and federal agencies and local and national foundations provide crucial operating support as well as key funding for new and ongoing programs. To learn more, contact the Development Department at 612.225.6166. For information about sponsorship opportunities and corporate benefits, contact us at corporatecircle@guthrietheater.org.

This activity is made possible by the voters of Minnesota through a Minnesota State Arts Board Operating Support grant, thanks to a legislative appropriation from the arts and cultural heritage fund.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

More than 500 volunteers give their time and talent in support of the Guthrie’s activities.

The Guthrie is a constituent of Theatre Communications Group and a member of the League of Resident Theatres and Minnesota Theater Alliance.

The Guthrie is a member of the American Arts Alliance and Minnesota Citizens for the Arts, government advocacy groups at the federal and state levels, respectively.

The actors and stage managers employed in this production are members of Actors’ Equity Association, the Union of Professional Actors and Stage Managers in the U.S.

Directors and choreographers are members of the Stage Directors and Choreographers Society, a national theatrical labor union.

The scenic, costume, lighting and sound designers in LORT theaters are represented by United Scenic Artists, Local USA 829 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees.

Guthrie costume and wardrobe employees, stage hands and craftspersons are represented by IATSE Local 13.

All scenery, props and costumes are designed specifically for Guthrie productions and built in the theater’s shops.
Theater Information and Policies

RESTROOMS
Public restrooms are located in the lobbies on Levels Four and Five. During performances, four universal, ADA-accessible restrooms that lock and provide privacy are available to patrons of any gender identity and expression on Levels Three and Four.

LEVEL THREE One all-gender restroom is accessible from the McGuire Proscenium Stage. Where Aisle 2 ends at the stage, pass through the door on the right.

LEVEL FOUR One all-gender restroom is located in the main lobby next to the men’s restroom, and two all-gender restrooms are located at the end of the Von Blon Lobby, which is past the main entrance to the Wurtele Thrust Stage.

EMERGENCY PROCEDURES
MEDICAL Please contact the nearest usher, either inside or outside the theater.

FIRE The proscenium stage has two lower emergency exits, two upper lobby exits on the orchestra level and two exits in each balcony that lead down and out to the Level Four lobby. Please exit to the lobby, where ushers will direct you to one of six fire exits that will take you outside the building on street level. Anyone with disabilities should proceed to the lobby elevators and wait for emergency personnel for evacuation.

POLICIES
PROHIBITED ITEMS Food, recording devices and laser pointers are prohibited inside the theaters. The Guthrie bans firearms on its premises. Please turn off phones and electronic devices prior to the performance. Texting is not allowed during the performance.

NO SMOKING In accordance with the Minnesota Clean Indoor Air Act, smoking is prohibited in the theaters and lobbies. Some productions may use prop cigarettes onstage.

PHOTO AND VIDEO Photos of the set are allowed before or after the show and during intermission but not when artists are onstage. Video or audio capture of any performance is strictly prohibited.

LEAVING DURING A PERFORMANCE Please let the first set of doors fully close behind you before opening the second set to prevent light from entering the theater.

DISRUPTIVE BEHAVIOR We reserve the right to escort disruptive patrons from the theater at any time.
